IPP3A Implementation Kit

Your business has a new privacy deadline.
Are you ready?

From 1 May 2026, businesses that collect personal information from third parties may need to tell people what is being collected, who it is being collected from, and why.

If your business runs credit checks, uses AML/CFT providers, receives information from lenders or insurers, or relies on referrals, there is a good chance this is relevant to you.

What has changed

The Privacy Act 2020 includes 13 Information Privacy Principles (IPPs) that your business must follow when handling personal information.

IPP3 already covers what businesses need to tell people when they collect personal information directly from them.

From 1 May 2026, the new IPP3A extends that approach to indirect collection, where the information is collected from someone else instead.

What this means for you

If your business collects personal information about individuals from someone else, you may need to notify them, unless an exemption applies.

For example, if your business runs credit checks, uses AML/CFT providers, receives information from lenders or insurers, or relies on referrals, there is a good chance this is relevant to you.

That includes most financial service providers, accountants, lawyers, and real estate agencies, and for many of those businesses it will be more than a quick privacy policy update.

You may need to review engagement letters, onboarding documents, website privacy wording, referral processes, and how information is handled for co-borrowers, guarantors, and existing clients.

ADVICE YOU CAN PROFIT FROM

A practical way to respond

The IPP3A Implementation Kit is designed to help your business take the next step with confidence.

It provides practical guidance, ready-to-use wording, and supporting templates to help you review your documents, update your process, and respond in a structured way.

It includes:

A user guide

To explain the new requirement and what it means in practice.

Wording for key documents

To help update engagement letters, website privacy wording, privacy policies, and client communications.

Two ready-to-use templates

To support implementation, including documenting third-party sources and dealing with situations not covered by normal onboarding documents.
